Canadian Nurses for Health & the Environment

Over a century ago, nurses understood that in order to be healthy, people needed clean air, water, and food. Today, environmental health not only concerns these important issues, but includes an awareness of topics such as global climate change and the importance of sustainable living. In this new millennium, Registered Nurses (RNs) continue to be a trusted voice in sharing this important message -- healthy people need healthy, sustainable environments.

The CNHE/IISE works to achieve the following objectives:

- ✿ Facilitate knowledge sharing and transfer based on environmental health principles and nursing best practices
- ✿ Support evidence-based environmental health practice
- ✿ Influence policy development and legislation to support environmental nursing practice
- ✿ Promote educational and research opportunities for nurses.

Want to add your voice to the growing number of Canadian RNs dedicated to protecting our environment and building a brighter, healthier, future for us all?
