Our Vision, Our Mission...

Over a century ago, nurses understood that in order to be healthy, people needed clean air, water, and food. Today, environmental health not only concerns these important issues, but includes an awareness of topics such as global climate change and the importance of sustainable living. In this new millennium, Registered Nurses (RNs) continue to be a trusted voice in sharing this important message -- healthy people need healthy, sustainable environments and health care and infrastructure that reflect this balance.

Canadian Nurses for Health and the Environment (CNHE) represents a group of RNs from across the nation who are dedicated to the improvement of environmental health across all domains of nursing practice, policy, research and education. CNHE is proud to be an associate member of the Canadian Nurses Association.

Did you know...?

~25% of illnesses are caused by environmental reasons (e.g. water, air, and soil contamination)*

CNHE is dedicated to...

- ◆ Supporting, promoting, and enhancing the engagement of RN's in the promotion of environmental health in all domains of nursing practice, education, and research;
- ◆ Providing a national forum for RN's to discuss and share knowledge and expertise about issues concerning health and the environment;
- ◆ Providing a venue for RN's to speak as a unified voice for influencing public policy related to environmental conditions affecting human and ecosystem health;
- ◆ Promoting and supporting opportunities for inter-professional & inter-sectoral approaches to environmental health practice, education, research and policy;
- ◆ Enhancing the profile of RN's work in areas concerning health and the environment at the municipal, provincial/territorial, federal and international level.
